GLT delights with latest stage play

Feb 22, 2017 | By James Culic

FORT ERIE — With its latest production, Garrison Little Theatre stepped outside its comfort zone of farces and light comedies, and tackled something a bit different. Despite heading into new territory, the cast and crew pulled off yet another fabulous effort with their production of Jacques Plante and the Parkdale Knitting Club.

Both hockey fans and theatre enthusiasts alike will find plenty to enjoy in the production, which blends the real life story of Plante with a fanciful tale of a small town woman smitten with the famed goalie through a shared love of knitting. The play is rife with emotional monologues and heartbreaking plot twists, but makes room for a few laughs in between.

GLT veterans Chuck Jagiello and Dan Bennett both deliver spectacular and captivating performances, bringing the troubled and eccentric lives of their respective characters to life.

Informative for the hockey fans and entertaining for the theatre lover, the play is undoubtedly one of the most interesting productions GLT has tackled in years, and shines thanks to the sharp directing work of Rick Nigh. There are still a few performances of the show left to go, on Feb. 24 and 25.
